

Testimony Before the National Capital Memorial Advisory Commission
Regarding a National World War I Memorial

Presented by The Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia

June 23, 2011

Chairman May, Commissioners, Ladies and Gentlemen: I am Nelson Rimensnyder the Historian of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia. Dedicated since 1865 to preserving and promoting the District's history and civic accomplishments, the AOI is currently celebrating its 146th year of continuous service to the residents and civic leaders of our great city.

On March 21, 2011 AOI member Joseph N. Grano wrote to the Board of Directors of the National World War I Memorial Foundation proposing an alternative to Senate Bill 253 and H.R. 938 which would establish a commission to ensure a suitable observance of the centennial of World War I and to designate memorials to the service of men and women of the United States in World War I. These proposals include altering the name of our District of Columbia World War I Memorial to insert the words "and National" (District of Columbia and National World War I Memorial). The Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia joins with our member Mr. Grano in urging you to consider an alternative to the pending legislation.

As Mr. Grano so eloquently points out, there is in fact already a national World War I memorial bearing the name of General Pershing. The memorial, occupying an entire city block, is elegantly situated opposite the White House Visitors' Center, within a half block of the White House and Ellipse, closely situated to the Washington Monument's axis of the National Mall and holds a distinguished position at the western-most point of the main stretch of Pennsylvania Avenue within view of the Capitol.

With two, relatively simple architectural additions and additional interpretive signage, Pershing Park would make a fitting and appropriate venue for a 'new' National World War I Memorial obviating the need to tamper with the District of Columbia's existing World War I Memorial in Ash Grove on Ohio Drive. In honor of Frank Buckles, a doughboy statue could be crafted in his image and placed at the North West entrance to the park – clearly visible from the 15th Street approach, the White House Visitors' Center and to the hundreds of thousands of visitors waiting to enter the White House grounds. The existing long, unadorned wall on the Pennsylvania Avenue side of the park could be boldly inscribed with, "National World War I Memorial" clearly visible from the White House Visitors' Center, the John A. Wilson Building and the 14th Street approach.

While we believe the efforts of Senator Rockefeller and his co-sponsors of Senate Bill 253, those of Representative Ted Poe and the co-sponsors of H.R. 938, together with the initiatives of the National World War I Memorial Foundation are praiseworthy to help reconcile the misperceptions and confusion facing the National World War Memorial in Kansas City and our District of Columbia World War I Memorial, we believe strongly that simply renaming or re-designating these existing monuments not only demeans the history of each of these existing memorials but, in fact, does not go far enough to realize the dream of a true National World War I Memorial in the Nation's Capital. The proponents of the World War II Memorial on the National Mall between the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument, after much controversy, realized their dream of a truly wonderful tribute to the men and women who gave their service and lives during the Second World War; however, if you visit the Pershing Park site you will see that this existing memorial already contains many of the features one would want in a national memorial: a water feature (beautiful fountain and pool), an impressive statue of General Pershing, historical and interpretive information engraved on the stone walls, etc. The only features it is missing are the engraving that would distinguish it as the "National World War I Memorial," a statue of a doughboy in honor of the military personnel who served – like Frank W. Buckles – and recognition of the other military services' contributions in World War I.

We believe these relative simple improvements to the existing memorial would make it worthy of being re-designated as the National World War I Memorial and by avoiding changes to either the National War I Memorial in Kansas City or the District of Columbia World War I Memorial would render controversial changes to these existing memorials moot.

Attached is a series of recent photographs which may help you envision how this impressive park could be transformed into a National Memorial dedicated to the First World War.

We believe this proposal deserves your support and consideration for re-designation of Pershing Park to be the National World War I Memorial and work to remove references to the District of Columbia World War I Memorial in both Sen. Rockefeller's and Representative Poe's legislation.

Thank you for the opportunity for me to testify before you today.

Sincerely,

Nelson Rimensnyder, Historian

The Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia
